Preface

Over 150 Years Of HISTORY

Services for individuals with developmental disabilities have changed significantly over the years. As attitudes, laws, technology and funding have changed, programs have evolved to better meet the needs of individuals. This history has been prepared to provide insight on these changes. Much of the information for the period from 1850 to 1950 is from publications from the American Association on Mental Retardation (AAMR), including the book titled A Century of Concern. Special thanks also goes to the Franklin County Council for Retarded Citizens, the Columbus Developmental Center, Dr. Raymond Horn, and many parents and FCBDD staff who provided details on our history.

Jed Morison, 2021

The First One Hundred Years 1850-1950

1850-1885

- Persons with mental retardation identified as “idiots, feeble-minded, and imbeciles.”
- Ohio was the second state to establish a state-supported residential school for people with developmental disabilities. This happened in 1857. The first nine pupils were received on August 3, 1857. Their instruction was carried out in a temporary residence located in a house at 727 East Main Street, Columbus, Ohio. In 1861, G.A. Doren, M.D. became Superintendent. In 1862, the resident population was 57.
- In 1864, the land that Columbus Developmental Center currently sits on was purchased and a year later the new residential school foundation was started. From the available records, it is unclear exactly when the building was completed but it is believed to have been in 1867 or 1868.
- “American Association on Mental Deficiency” was created in 1876. At this time it was named “The Association of Medical Officers of American Institutions of Idiotic and Feeble-minded Persons.”
- Seven states, including Ohio, had institutions for the “feeble-minded” in 1876; by 1885, twenty states had institutions (first public Institution opened in Boston, Massachusetts in 1848).
- Professionals made great efforts to promote the creation of institutions.
- Alcoholism recognized as a contributing cause of “idiocy”.
- Some professionals drew parallels between “idiocy” and “criminality”.
- Early institutions were founded on the principle that persons with mental retardation can be trained.
- In 1879, first classes for handicapped children were established in Ohio in Cincinnati and Cleveland.

The Columbus Railroad Company used horse drawn streetcars when Columbus State Institute was known as an asylum.

1886-1895

- Need for more research on etiology stressed.
- Some advocated placing individuals in smaller county homes and alms houses, rather than segregating people in large institutions. (The beginning of group homes.)
- Sterilization, care of “epileptics”, and care of “delinquent retarded” persons were all subjects under consideration and discussion.
- Alcohol considered by many to be a cause of mental retardation.

1896-1905

- Training for staff working with persons with mental retardation advocated.
- “Idiocy” defined as “a private person as opposed to one engaged in public affairs” caused by “deficiency of nutrition.”
- According to Dr. Langdon Down, “The Mongolian type” made up about 10% of the “feebleminded children.”
- Institutions are overcrowded with waiting lists.
- Sterilization of persons with mental retardation advocated.
- By 1899, there were special classes for the “feebleminded” in a few public schools, and a few special schools.
- In 1899, an AAMD report said that “removing a backward child from regular public school classes deprived him of the opportunity to mingle with more clever children and to imitate them” (mainstreaming). “In addition, the child’s reputation should not be spoiled and this blot may stay with him all his life if he was placed in a special class or special institution” (labeling).
- Researcher Wylie concluded that “feebleminded children were subnormal in height and weight, puberty was delayed, and they continued growing later than normal children, indicating delayed development.”
- Tuberculosis cited as a major cause of mental retardation.
- Alexander Johnson advocated expansion of institutions to care for adults who would work to support themselves and reduce operating costs of the institutions. He also advocated the development of workshops, that wouldn’t compete with private industries, but would supply other institutions with brooms, brushes, clothing, etc.

- “Individual Treatment Programs” advocated by some.
- Elizabeth Daniels Nash, 1902, suggested that heredity was not the only agent responsible for feeblemindedness. She provided the following advice to parents:
 - “First — learn to expect little from your deficient child. If he has an intellect of a child half his years, regard him as of that age in the work you give him.
 - Second — give him something to do that is within his comprehension.”
- E.R. Johnstone deplored the use of corporal punishment, and proposed a system of discipline similar to present behavior modification techniques.
- In 1904, Johnstone stated “Our Association (AAMD) must take a bold stand and demand for the feebleminded the education to which every child in the Union is entitled — whatsoever is best fitted for it.” (In the 1970’s P.L. 94-142, the “Education of all Handicapped Children” Act was passed.)
- Some Institutions had populations of over 1000.
- Many states enacted laws enabling Superintendents to keep the “feebleminded” indefinitely in the institution, and laws to prevent their marriage.
- Alexander Johnson advocated the development of workshops, that wouldn’t compete with private industries, but would supply other institutions with brooms, brushes, clothing, etc.

1906-1915

- Movement established to make a separation between mental retardation and epilepsy.
- Many family doctors told parents that their “feeble-minded children could be cured by sending them to an institution.”
- Several felt that the education and training of persons with mental retardation was for the Medical community rather than educators.
- In 1907, Naomi Norworthy, Psychologist, stated that “the difference between idiots and other people is one of degree and not of kind. The same difference exists between the very bright among school children, and the mediocre.”
- In 1909, Columbus Schools established first class for children with mental retardation.
- Some institutions had populations of over 1500.
- H.H. Goddard proposed the following classifications: IDIOT, IMBECILE, FEEBLEMINDED, with each class subdivided into three levels. In 1910, this was adopted by AAMD (at this time AAMD was called “The American Association for the Study of the Feeble-minded.”)
- Fred Kuhlmann stated that “feeble-mindedness is a retarded rate of mental development. The term ‘arrested development’ or ‘mental arrest’ is a misnomer for it implies that the development has ceased.”
- Eight states had adopted sterilization laws by 1913.
- Many experienced difficulty in obtaining funds for the care of the “feeble-minded”.

- Segregation of the “feeble-minded” into institutions was generally advocated.
- Binet tests were accepted as an objective and scientific method of measuring intelligence.
- The use of psychological clinics or laboratories in institutions grew significantly.

1916-1925

- Attitudes of professionals shifted to advocating community placement, and special classes in the public schools; rather than sterilization and segregation. At this time, there was not widespread community acceptance of these ideas.
- Dr. Charles Bernstein advocated individual homes stating that children should be given a normal living environment instead of an abnormal one.
- In 1917, Columbus State Institute had 2430 residents, twice that of ten years earlier.
- Walter E. Fernald stated that “when we discovered the moron, we doubled the number of feeble-minded, and we carried over the generalizations about the idiot and the imbecile. The individuality of the feeble-minded is almost as great as our own. We can no longer say they all need this, or they all need that.”

- Again, alcohol considered major cause of mental retardation, yet this was challenged by some.
- Recruitment of institutional staff was a problem resulting from inadequate salaries.
- Emphasis was placed on separating criminals/delinquents from the “feeble-minded”.
- In 1924, there were over 39,000 “patients” in state institutions compared to 6,009 in 1893.
- In 1925, there were 89 private institutions, compared to 9 in 1893. There were special classes in 171 cities in the U.S. with enrollment of nearly 34,000.
- Instruction of parents and teachers was advocated at this time.
- Again, community understanding and acceptance was advocated.

1926-1935

- By 1926, there were 56 state institutions in 43 states with a population of about 50,000.
- By 1927, 23 states had sterilization laws.
- The need for research and training was emphasized.
- Henry Goddard suggested that a measure of intelligence was not in itself sufficient for a diagnosis of feeble-mindedness.
- First International Congress on Mental Hygiene held in 1930.
- George L. Wallace, M.D., suggested dropping from the social vocabulary the terms “Institution” and “patient” and instead use the terms “school” and “pupil”.

- Wallace advocated social training with academic training and suggested extending the school year throughout the entire twelve months.
- H.H. Ramsey, M.D., stated that the public looked upon the “defective with pity or as a menace.”
- Feeble-mindedness and intellectual subnormality were considered under the generic term “mental deficiency.”
- E.R. Johnstone reported that approximately 13% of the total population was intellectually subnormal or retarded.
- Several advocated closer cooperation between the Department of Welfare and the Department of Education in the various states.
- The name of “American Association for the Study of the Feeble-minded” was changed to the “American Association on Mental Deficiency” (AAMD) in 1933.
- The word “feeble-minded” was replaced with “mentally defective.”
- The grades of mental deficiency were defined as:
 - Idiot having an IQ of less than 20
 - Imbecile, with an IQ of 20-49
 - Moron, with an IQ of 50-69.

1936-1945

- Attitudes favoring sterilization began to change somewhat in the early 1940's. It was recognized that sterilization did not reduce the number of "mental defectives," yet there still remained some feeling for selective sterilization.
- Edgar Doll identified three essential elements necessary for a diagnosis of mental deficiency: (1) social inadequacy; (2) low intelligence; (3) mentally arrested development.
- Many children, who should never have been committed, were being sent to institutions.
- Research, training and public awareness all identified as major problems.
- Existing public education programs were criticized for lack of educational services for mentally retarded children.
- Careful screening for "mental defectives" by the immigration authorities was advocated.
- Research in motor development advocated.
- Horatio Pollock, Ph.D., stated that "The whole child should be treated, that instruction and training should be planned and given to meet the needs of each child; that the chief aim in training children should be development of a healthy personality, and that both physical and social environment should be favorable for the development of each child."
- Institutionalization continued to increase, resulting in overcrowding, long waiting lists, and poor staff/resident ratios.
- Advances in determination of different etiologies and the hopefulness of medical intervention, both in prevention and treatment were emerging.
- Much discussion centered around the problem of "delinquent defectives", including some preliminary discussion about reorganizing state institutions into county or regional institutions.
- In 1943, a total of 90,102 "mental defectives were in the custody of state institutions.

In 1925 there were 89 private institutions, compared to 9 in 1893. There were special classes in 171 cities in the U. S. with enrollment of nearly 34,000.

1946-1950

- The need for expansion of social work in the field of mental deficiency was emphasized.
- The function of the social worker was to provide guidance for "mental defectives" for post-school age, and to assist them in leading acceptable lives in the community.
- Changes in terminology were advocated because some of the terms that were used had fallen into disrepute. Terms such as "high-grade", "middle-grade" and "severely retarded" were substituted for moron, imbecile, and idiot.
- Safeguarding the rights and privileges of "the mentally retarded" was advocated.
- The National Association for Retarded Children held its first meeting in 1950.

Work buildings on the grounds of Columbus State Institute were converted from dormitory cottages.

Classroom work was encouraged in the Institutes.

FCBDD History 1950 Forward

1951-1960

- Franklin County Council for Retarded Children was incorporated on September 24, 1951 by the following persons: Mrs. Phyllis Emory; Dr. Roger Gove; Mrs. Mary Rankin; Dr. Herschel Nisonger; and Dr. J. William Rossel.
- In 1951, Am. S.B. 157 passed, establishing county or district training centers for “mentally deficient” youth under the age of 21.
- The first class of fourteen children, ages four to fourteen began in July, 1951, at the First Community Church. Entrance requirements were that a child be toilet trained, ambulatory, and able to fit into a group. At this time:
 - Mothers served as assistants to the teacher.
 - Car pools provided transportation.
 - Parents paid tuition of $25/month.
- Public funds began to be provided for these services by the state and the Franklin County Welfare Board. Donations and door-to-door campaigns helped finance the programs.
- In 1952, the transportation system began with the purchase of two Willys station wagons.
- By 1955, enrollment increased to 60 in 6 classes.
- All facilities were leased or donated and provided limited programming options (e.g., Church basements, public schools which were no longer acceptable for public school use, etc.).
- Home Visitor Program established in August, 1958 with 20 receiving services during the first year.
- First sheltered workshop began at Goodwill Industries in October, 1959. Workshop was certified by the U.S. Department of Labor.
- By 1960, 180 students were enrolled in 16 classes at Olen-tangy School, 40 persons were enrolled in home training, and 15 adults were enrolled in the workshop.
- In 1960, the approximate cost per enrollee per year had risen to $610, almost $130 more than it cost in 1951.
- In 1960, the Horn Report, prepared by a committee chaired by Dr. Raymond Horn, was submitted to Governor Michael DiSalle recommending establishment of a County system to serve persons with mental retardation, funded with local, state and federal funds. This led to the legislation (Am. S.B. 169) that created County Boards of Mental Retardation in 1967.

Franklin County Council For Retarded Children

Purposes of the Council, as stated in their incorporation articles, were:

- To promote the general welfare of the retarded child.
- To organize and stimulate the development of adequate facilities to meet the various needs.
- To further the training and education of professional personnel in the field of mental retardation.
- To advise and aid parents in the solution of their problems and promote mutual understanding between parents and the community for intelligent cooperation in the interest of the child.
- To solicit funds and bequests to be used to promote the general welfare of the retarded child.

1961-1970

- In November, 1961, The Council's Program was made an agency of the Franklin County Child Welfare Board, as a result of Amended House Bill No. 778.
- In 1962, a five year, .3 mill tax levy was approved by the voters and again renewed in 1967 for an additional five years.
- In October, 1963 ARCraft incorporated as ARCraft Division, Council for Retarded Citizens.
- ARCraft North Sheltered Workshop on Indianola opened in November, 1963; and in September, 1966, the ARCraft North Activity Center began.
- In 1963, the Council began its first preschool, although other preschool classes for mentally retarded children had been in operation since 1958.
- By 1965, there were 645 children and adults enrolled in the program at a cost of approximately $730 per enrollee, per year.

- On October 25, 1967, Amended Senate Bill No. 169 created County Boards of Mental Retardation. This is when the Franklin County Program for the Mentally Retarded came into being as a separate agency, working cooperatively with the Council for Retarded Citizens.

- The original members of the Franklin County Board of Mental Retardation were: Betty Crist, Joseph DeRoberts, Bernard Niehm, Theodore Mixer, Hylas Hilliard, Vera Schmarr, and Clyde Schoenfeld. The first Administrator was Mr. W. Ronald Ansley.
- Dr. Niehm was appointed Administrator upon Mr. Ansley's death in July, 1968.
- By 1970, the Program was serving 1071 children and adults at an approximate cost of $1389 per enrollee, per year.
- In 1970, the voters approved a .7 mill, ten year tax levy, that allowed the Franklin County Program for the Mentally Retarded to begin an extensive building program.
- In 1970's Special Education Regional Resource Centers (SERRC's) established to increase parent involvement.

1971-1979

- Mr. Ken McBain began as Administrator in January, 1971.
- ARCraft of Franklin County, Ohio was incorporated in September, 1971.
- In 1973, Section 504 of civil rights legislation was passed, amending the civil rights legislation of 1963 and strengthening protections from discrimination for persons who have handicaps.
- Early Childhood Training Classes began under the Franklin County Program for the Mentally Retarded in 1973.
- Mrs. Dorothy Renner appointed Acting Administrator from March, 1972 to February, 1973.

- Mr. Stephen G. Pleasnick began as Superintendent in February, 1973.

- Southeast M.R. Training Center opened in Groveport in November, 1974.
